Working with Natural Systems

At the core of the structure is the creation of an open space that dedication to sunlight, water, and aquatic plants. The structure is greenhouse like in that it is built out of mainly glass to bring in natural light and allow for ecological systems to continue inside the structure. The structure features a large pool filled with mainly lily pads along with other aquatic plants which connect the structure's inspiration to the natural world. The rest of the structure features patches of low vegetation to allow for seating and gathering while being directly connected to nature. There are no barriers besides the thicker areas of trees and the structure even though it is mainly glass, making it feel open.

Art Nouveau Aesthetics

The drawn art nouveau inspired curves throughout the corpse are a main source of inspiration for the form of the structure. The goal was to create a curving structure that felt flowing yet could hold pieces of glass to create the greenhouse affect. The connections between these glass panels are also flowing and organic like the illustrations creating a calming atmosphere and invites people into the indoor oasis.
